BESTIARIO DE ABERDEEN (CONÓCELO)

Por: Erika Arlabé
Cuentos y leyendas ibéricas, 1 de febrero de 2012 7 veces leído

Después de dormir tres días, despierta y emite un poderoso rugido, y de su boca emana un olor dulce, como si fuera una mezcla de todos los perfumes. Cuando otros animales escuchan su voz, le siguen por donde vaya, a causa de su dulce esencia. Sólo el dragón, oyendo esta voz, se presa del miedo y huye a las cavernas del interior de la tierra...

¿Podrías avisarme a quién describe el texto anterior? Aunque no lo creas, es parte de la descripción que hace el Bestiario de Aberdeen sobre las pauteras (Folio 9). ¿Que raro, no?

El Bestiario de Aberdeen es un manuscrito inglés ilustrado y redactado en el siglo XII. Este documento muestra la descripción de los bestias del señor (es decir, de los distintos animales y criaturas) que se conocían en ese entonces.

Actualmente este manuscrito se encuentra resguardado, pero la Universidad de Aberdeen se dio a la tarea de digitalizarlo y compartirlo a público a través de la siguiente liga:

<http://www.abdn.ac.uk/bestiary/>

Puedes recorrer el manuscrito por medio del índice de páginas, para dar click en las bestias que más llaman tu atención, o servírate warrior a consultar página por página. Lo gran ventaja que trae el sitio es que debajo de la digitalización de páginas se encuentra la transcripción del texto en latín (por si te confunde la tipografía) y su traducción al inglés. Lamentablemente no cuenta con traducción al español, pero sabes que siempre puedes apoyarte de un traductor y tu diccionario.

Aún que no explores más y anímate a descubrir a las criaturas del señor de una manera distinta, a través de textos en latín y las ilustraciones que buscaban dejar testimonio de estas criaturas.

El basilisco puede ser conquistado por comadreja. Los hombres las introducen a las cuevas donde los basiliscos se esconden. Al verlas, los basiliscos huyen, las comadreas los persiguen y los matan.

Near folio 21 verso two illuminations of the ox (Bos), camel (Camelus), dromedary (Dromedarius), ass (Asinus), onager (Onager) and part of horse (Equus) are also assumed to be missing.[7] Also missing from folio 15 recto on are some leaves which should have contained crocodile (Crocodylus), manticore (Manticora) and part of parandrus (Parandrus).[7] These missing folios are assumed from comparisons between the Ashmole and other related bestiaries.[2][7] Contents Folio 1 recto : Creation of heaven and earth (Genesis, 1: 1-5). University of Aberdeen, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press. This Bestiary also shows stylistic similarities with the Paris Psalters of Canterbury.[6] The Avary section is similar to the Aviarium which is a well-known 12th century monastic text.[7] The deviation from traditional color usage can be seen in the tiger, satyr, and unicorn folios as well as many other folios.[7] The satyr in the Aberdeen Bestiary when compared to the satyr section of the slightly older Worskop bestiary is almost identical.[3][7] There are small color notes in the Aberdeen Bestiary that are often seen in similar manuscripts dating between 1175 and 1250 which help indicate that it was made near the year 1200 or 1210.[2][6] These notes are similar to many other side notes written on the sides of pages throughout the manuscript and were probably by the painter to remind himself of special circumstances, these notes occur irregularly throughout the text.[6][8][7] Illuminations Folio page 1 to 3 recto depicts the Genesis 1:1-25 which is represented with a large full page illumination Biblical Creation scene in the manuscript.[7] Folio 5 recto shows Adam, a large figure surrounded by gold leaf and towering over others, with the theme of “Adam naming the animals” - this starts the compilation of the bestiary portion within the manuscript. ^ a b c d e f g h Morrison, Grollemonde, Elizabeth, Larisa (2019). This much-anticipated annual race faced some setbacks during the COVID-19 pandemic, and while the world hasn't returned to normal yet, devoted cycling fans (and those of us who simply love edge-of-our-seats competition) are eager for the big return slated for this summer. In honor of the Tour de France's grand 2021 re-entry to the sporting universe on Saturday, June 26, we're taking a look at some fun facts that'll get your anticipation building even more. As you're watching the Tour de France, you might hear commentators use some curious turns of phrase — and many of them will be unique to the race itself. Folio 5 verso depicts quadrupeds, livestock, wild beasts, and the concept of the herd.[7] Folio 7 to 18 recto depicts large cats and other beasts such as wolves, foxes and dogs.[7] Many pages from the start of the manuscript's bestiary section such as 11 verso featuring a hyena shows small pin holes which were likely used to map out and copy artwork to a new manuscript.[7] Folio 20 verso to 28 recto depicts livestock such as sheep, horses, and goats.[7] Small animals like cats and mice are depicted on folio 24 to 25. It's also called a “musette” or, sometimes, a “bonk bag.”Lanterne Rouge: In French this term means “red light,” and it refers to the cyclist who's in the very last place in the race. The race itself takes place over the course of nearly a month, with 21 different day-long segments making up the bulk of the competition. That's because newspaper editor Henri Desgrange, who helped organize the initial tour, was so aghast at the conduct not only of the fans but also of the competitors in the 1903 race that he wanted to discontinue it despite its clear appeal. Le temps des mutations. James considered the Aberdeen Bestiary “a replica of Ashmole 1511” a view echoed by many other art historians.[5][6] Provenance The original patron of both the Aberdeen and Ashmole Bestiary was considered to be a high-ranking member of society such as a prince, king or another high ranking church official or monastery.[1] However, since the section related to monastery life that was commonly depicted within the Aviarium manuscript was missing the original patron remains uncertain but it appears less likely to be a church member.[6] The Aberdeen Bestiary was kept in Church and monastic settings for a majority of its history.[1] However at some point it entered into the English royal collections library.[6][5] The royal Westminster Library shelf stamp of King Henry the VIII is stamped on the side of the bestiary.[7] How King Henry acquired the manuscript remains unknown although it was probably taken from a monastery.[6] The manuscript appears to have been well-read by the family based on the amount of reading wear on the edges of the pages.[6] Around the time King James of Scotland became the King of England the bestiary was passed along to the Marischal College, Aberdeen.[2][1] The manuscript is in fragmented condition as many illuminations on folios were removed individually as miniatures likely not for monetary but possibly for personal reasons.[2] The manuscript currently is in the Aberdeen Library in Scotland where it has remained since 1542.[3] Description Materials The Aberdeen bestiary is a gilded[3] decorated manuscript featuring large miniatures and some of the finest pigment, parchment and gold leaf from its time. ^ a b c d Haupt, Lyanda Lynn (2013). This is a car that follows the pack of cyclists and picks up those who become too fatigued or injured to keep riding.Musket Bag: While it may sound like something you'd find at a Civil War battleground, a musket bag is sort of like a bagged lunch — but it's packed with energy gels, water, sandwiches and other fuel for the cyclists. You can use that to catch up on the race and decide if you want to make the monthlong (or longer) investment. Boost your bicycling know-how by learning what these terms mean before catching one of the race segments:Bonking: Cyclists don't want to “bonk” during this race; it means they've run out of energy and are too wiped to continue.Peloton: No, it's not the fancy exercise bike you bought during the pandemic. It was actually a promotional event hosted with the intention of bringing more publicity to L'Auto, a French newspaper that focused on reporting details about different sporting events. pp. 955-980. Some portions of the manuscript such as folio eight recto even feature tarnished silver leaf.[7] The original patron was wealthy enough to afford such materials so that the artists and scribes could enjoy creative freedom while creating the manuscripts.[6] The artists were professionally trained and experimented with new techniques - such as heavy washes mixed with light washes and dark thick lines and use of contrasting color.[4] The aqua color that is in the Aberdeen Bestiary is not present in the Ashmole Bestiary.[2][6] The Aberdeen manuscript is loaded with filigree flora design and champie style gold leaf initials.[6] Canterbury is considered to be the original location of manufacture as the location was well known for manufacturing high-end luxury books during the thirteenth century.[6] Its similarities with the Canterbury Paris Psalter tree style also further draws evidence of this relation.[6] Style The craftsmanship of both Ashmole and Aberdeen bestiary suggest similar artists and scribes.[6] Both the Ashmole and Aberdeen bestiary were probably made within 10 years of each other due to their stylistic and material similarities and the fact that both are crafted with the finest materials of their time.[6] Stylistically both manuscripts are very similar but the Aberdeen has figures that are both more voluminous and less energetic than those of the Ashmole Bestiary.[6] The color usage has been suggested as potentially Biblical in meaning as color usage had different interpretations in the early 13th century.[4][2] The overall style of the human figures as well as color usage is very reminiscent of Roman mosaic art especially with the attention to detail in the drapery.[4] Circles and ovals semi-realistically depict highlights throughout the manuscript.[6] The way that animals are shaded in a Romanesque fashion with the use of bands to depict volume and form, which is similar to an earlier 12th-century Bury Bible made at Bury St.Edmunds. MS 24) is a 12th-century English illuminated manuscript bestiary that was first listed in 1542 in the inventory of the Old Royal Library at the Palace of Westminster.[1][1] Due to similarities, it is often considered to be the “sister” manuscript of the Ashmole Bestiary.[1] The connection between the ancient Greek didactic text Physiologus and similar bestiary manuscripts is also often noted.[2] Information about the manuscript's origins and patrons are circumstantial, although the manuscript most likely originated from the 13th century and was owned by a wealthy ecclesiastical patron from north or south England.[2] Currently, the Aberdeen Bestiary resides in the Aberdeen University Library in Scotland.[3] History The Aberdeen Bestiary and the Ashmole Bestiary are considered by Xenia Muratova, a professor of art history, to be “the work of different artists belonging to the same artistic milieu.”[4] Due to their “striking similarities” they are often compared and described by scholars as being “sister manuscripts.”[4][5] The medievalist scholar M.
