The steps to write a letter for a Donation of Wal-Mart in the local Wal-Mart stores in the United States have a base that donates articles and money to local Bensysical organizations and public schools. Applications for a Wal-Mart donation can be obtained at the customer service counter in the front of the store. A Wal-Mart application is included in this brochure. There are limited quantity funds for each store, so if you want to obtain a donation from Wal-Mart, send your letter and application form at the beginning of the school year or as soon as possible. Follow the steps listed below to help you guarantee that a Donation of Wal-Mart is granted. Before you start writing your letter to Wal-Mart, get permission from your school director. Each school has different polycs and procedures to request donations. Make sure to follow the appropriate procedures for your school. Once you receive permission from the director, choose a Wal-Mart request on the customer service desk. Complete the application as a whole. Do not leave blank or information that is missing. Write a presentation letter to Wal-Mart following the example provided in this brochure. Show the application form and the presentation letter to the director. Once you receive the director's approval, send your application to the address that appears in the Wal-Mart application. If you have not had news from Wal-Mart after two or three weeks, communicate with the customer service counter to find out the status of your application. If your application has been approved, wait until you get a Wal-Mart letter confirming the donation before starting buying something from the store. Give a copy of the Director's approval form. Time, luck and hard work play a role, but the business prodigies that we all outline have one thing in common: intelligent ideas. Meet four young people with seven -day income, and the road map for the early one. A life of Spicename: Brian Taylorcompany: Kernel Seasonslocation: Elk Grove Village, Ill.Age: 30Brian Taylor can thank his friends with pleasure tired of his growing empire of popcorn-seasonings. As a student at the University of Michigan in 2000, the native of Chicago-Aea would bore eate Cheese powders. Through the trial and error, he presented himself with a list of a a © xitos of flavors of popcorn. He spread the word, and soon dozens of inhabitants slept at his door asking for agitators of his barbecue or Parmesan mixtures. "My friends laugh when we remember the first time we packed condiments in my room," he says. "We carry 100 bottles by hand. We have grown a lot since then." Today, Taylor's Kernel Seasons live in heat, not fat of pop Supermarkets, including each Wal-Mart, Kmart, Target and Blockbuster Video. But that ramp did not happen from the night to the corn. Performing your hobby could be a viable business concept, the main philosophy decomposed $ 7,000 that had saved tennis teaching to hire flavor consultants to develop commercially scalable mixtures so condiments. After graduation, he moved with so parents in the northern suburbs of Chicago and became a spice mixer, chief seller, accountant and seller, that first year, year. He sold his mix to a movie theater. After years of constant growth, kernel seasons, based on a 31,000 square feet installation and 41 employees in Elk Grove, now has four production lines that produce 14 flavors. The company also recently started selling its brand of gourmet corn and butter coverage in the cinema style. Next: Taylor plans to launch a line of beverage mixes, potato and pasta condiment mixtures, and sweet oat mixes, yogurt, cereal and toast. In 2003, the last time it launched revenue figures, kernel seasons generated $2 million. Since then, the company has grown approximately 50 percent per year. "The best thing about being an entrepreneur is that I'm not always in the office," he says. "As my father always said, 'I keep my office in my ears.'" Taylor and his wife, who had their first child in January, make time to travel, ski and golf. He's also working on a MBA at the University of Chicago and he's in a firm grip on his business. "I'm very focused on product development and sales and marketing," says Taylor, who doesn't see himself selling his business in the short term. "I am always nervous to discover new products, but now I have the luxury of choosing new ways for the company and leaving my ideas in the hands of others." Something of a big problem: Matt and Bryan Wallscompany: Snorg Teeslocation: Alpharetta, Ga.Agies: 28 and 24 there are two reactions to Snorg's typical tee: immediate laughter or absolute confusion. And that's the good. The Atlanta-based T-shirt company has built its business around dark references of movies and video games and visual words games. If you don't understand, you're not part of his demographic. The site failed, but the brothers stayed with dozens of fun T-shirt ideas that occurred to them: the rain of ideas, so they decided they decided Try the clothes. At first, Matt, who was working on him, would return to work house and stay awake until 2 a.m. Manage his business in line. "Initially I thought it was going to explode very rough, and we made some wrong assumptions about how well several marketing techniques would work," says Walls. "For example, we think we could buy a link in Colegehumor for 200 dollars per day and that would send to more than 10,000 visitors. Surely 1 percent would buy something. But they definitely do not." The first wave of the compai ± aa was produced in 2004 and 2005, with said based á € -á €: in the á © sito of the independent movie Napoleon Dynamite. However, once that madness calmed down, the brothers knew that they needed to rethink the business, that they ran out of walls. "When the big boxes began to sell similar shirts, we realized that we had nothing more," he says. "We needed to expand our product offer, so in January 2006, they began to work in full time and redesign and the website to make it easier to use." The additional attention paid off. Snorg now uses 10 people, contracts with 10 freelancers and has had a series of bestsellers, including the favorite of all time, "I am a big problem." One of his models, Alice French, famous for her huge smile, has become an internet ácon. Walls now works mainly in marketing, while Bryan observes the production. His father, a former Coca-Cola auditor, watches the books, and everyone joins twice a week to launch new t-shirt ideas. Now that the year is here (sales are between $ 5 million and $ 10 million), the brothers walls hopes to reap some of the benefits. "We got into that way of work, and that is difficult to change," he says "Now that we are established, we should have a better standard of living. One of my goals this year is to work less." To that end, he and his brother have made sails of wind. "When the Wind Begins," Walls Walls'You probably don't find us in the office." Social (networks) Butterfly Social (Networking) Butterfly name: Ashley Quallscompany: Whatlifelocation: Southgate, Mich.age: 19ashley Qualls is an accidental entrepreneur. His website, Whittlife.com, which he established in 2004, was mainly believed as a way of sharing his personalized templates of MySpace.com with friends and family. But in 2005 the design of it had been discovered by a legion of adolescents who began to decorate their website with their pink and hermatic design. "It was always more a hobby. I never had the intention of earning a lot of money with it," says Qualls. "I really enjoyed designing and my audience felt that." That passion led to Qualls, Ashbo to its Internet fanatic, to buy a dedicated server space to house its site. A year after, he left the secondary school at 15 years (although he later obtained his Ged and an associate title) and began his website seriously. That meant calming 25 to 30 Myspace design per day and design for any other application with customizable content. In 2006, Wornlife was drawing up to 375,000 visitors to the day, and the advertisers realized that Ashbo's site was his holy grail, an automal website created by a teenager for teenagers. At one point he offered a payment day of $ 5 million. Instead, he made deals with direct advertisers and, among other things, he used the adolescent influence of any life to help launch the Jonas Brothers. His year and his frequent publications also led to a minor cult of celebrities around the qualls themselves, which appeared in the view and, for last, he had 78,065 friends in MySpace.Today, Wornlife has a staff of nine and is On the edge of an important transformation. As the MySpace market share is seen food due to the growing popularity of which does not allow customizable designs, Qualls has seen their traffic drop. I asked him, "How are you going to make money if you're giving space and bandwidth?" says levin. "he said: try and see what works," and within a month, he had spent $80 and made $200. I figured if we could multiply this by 1,000 or 10,000, we would have a viable business."It turned out to be more than viable—Imageshack, which gets most of its revenue through targeted advertising, now employs 10 people and runs 600 servers. It gets 50 million unique visitors each month and more than 12 million page views a day. One estimate put sales at $56 million a year.But the company is also becoming a technology platform. In February, Levin launched Y-Frog, an application that uses Imageshack to allow Twitter users to add images to their posts."I believe we've captured 90 to 95 percent of the mobile market already," Levin says. "Our software comes bundled with some of the most popular iPhone applications. If you've ever shared a photo on your phone, you've probably used us."Levin isn't in the business to make money. In fact, he says he's never taken a dime from Imageshack, which he and his brother own 80 percent of. Instead, he hopes to build Imageshack into a company with the clout of Google or YouTube. His experience at Google, Levin says, gave him the skills to run a complex technology efficiently, with low overhead and minimal disruption. This helps him think about pushing Imageshack to a new level. "We can take big risks and be entrepreneurial. We can afford to fail, but we were set up to succeed from the get-go."At the same time, Levin isn't afraid to enjoy his success. "I certainly love running my business—it makes my day," he says. "But I'm definitely not a workaholic." "Unlike other people that might come to money, I'm not interested in celebrity status or being well-known," he says. "Enjoying my family and enjoying my kids are my No. 1 things."Jason Daley is a freelance writer based in madison, wis. A 115-Year-Old Startup?
